eral, State and municipal government. The other, the social priest, has luxurious tastes, and is seduced by the allurements which make life so sensuously attractive to the man of the world, he finds a private carriage, the induigences of Delmonico's, and other gratifications requisite to his appetiting necessities. He loves his sybaritic case, and feels with deep resentment the hand of discipline.

"These representatives classes, as all know who have cognizance of the developments in conspicuous places in this kreat metropolis, gave Architshop Corrigan infinite trouble from the beginning. A third class might be named, that of the priest learned in the law who knows it all and is ever seeking for a client priest to defend against the claims of superior authority. This is the petificaging priest who does his share of mischief, though under subjection. These worldly priests have been kept under control by the firm but prudent rule of Architishop Corrigan without open scandal, but with much robellious though innoxious muttering.

"But if the mean time great is the reloicing among the enemy at the McGlynn triumph, and even the social priest, the mask abandoned, now talks with incelent innuendo and threatening manner against those high in authority, who have held him to his duty as far as possible. Has not a certain degree of demornization spread through the Church already?

"Certainly, none of the high administrative Catholic dignitaries of our country, not within the favored circle, feels in the least degree prudent to do any disciplinary act, which the priest called in question may not approve, less he may find another McGlynn, Burtsell or other complexious rebel against Church authority to clamer in public, to arrain bits motives with virulent personal vin-who worked through the well-known provision brokerage houses of J. G. Steever & Co., E. W. Balley & Co., and A. C. Helmholz.

As the weeks passed it became necessary for the operator to buy a large amount of pork at high prices. Then came the stringency, and, as its grip lightened, those who had been bulls on pork and the list of "tallers," who always follow the lead of any daring speculator, began to see the inevitable and to stand from under.

This added to the strain on the manipulator of the deal and made the outcome more certain. The explosion came at the opening this morning, when the secretary announced from the balcony of the trading-room that the three firms above mentioned were unable to meet their contracts and advising those having trades with them to close them out under the rules.

The sound of Secretary Stone's voice had not ceased to reverberate in the lofty room when bedlam broke loose in the provision pit.
